Dear LASA program standard revision participants:

Re: revised Law and Security Administration program standard title

I have some good news with regard to the Law and Security Administration program—a new title has been determined for the revised program standard. Throughout our consultations this year, the majority of program stakeholders (e.g., program coordinators and associated faculty and administrators, employers, advisory committee members, and graduates) indicated the revised program standard required a program title revision. Further consultations took place and, most recently, at the Justice and Public Safety Co-ordinators' Conference last week, the LASA coordinators reached unanimous consensus with the title "Justice Studies." Incidentally, the term "justice" was one of the more common suggestions put forward by stakeholders during our consultations.

The new title "Justice Studies" is quite appropriate as it meets our criteria for a relatively broad and inclusive term that captures the revised program standard, the field of study and the wide range of occupations in the field. It is also important to note that the new program standard title will appear on the graduates' credential (diploma). However, this does not preclude a college from using an alternate title for marketing purposes, i.e., each college's program in the Justice Studies cluster can be rebranded to reflect a specialty area, such as:

Justice Studies —Private Security
Justice Studies —Customs Border Services
Justice Studies —Corporate and Commercial Security
Justice Studies —Security and Risk Management
Justice Studies —Investigation and Protection Studies
Justice Studies —investigations-Public and Private Justice Studies —Airport Security
Justice Studies—Law and Security
And so on.

Please feel free to contact me with any comments or questions you may have about the revised title for the revised program standard.

Best regards,

Paul
